

“In Living in the Nature Poem, Mary Saylor gives us more than just a journal of the natural world: she gives us an interaction with a world populated by characters as diverse as cells and stars. Exploring biology, astronomy, and sociology, Saylor writes elegantly about the ‘universal need known to artists, children, poets,/who, poised in mystery, must/watch and wait and wonder.’ And she does it with a nice helping of humor, describing human tissue as ‘cliques that become/known as Bone, Gland, Organ,/ Blood, Artery, Vein,’ and recounting her battle with a bug in amusingly theological language. Living in the Nature Poem is a good read by an inspired writer, one who knows her craft and plies it well.”

—Annmarie Lockhart, Editor, vox poetica

“In her book Living in the Nature Poem, Mary Saylor gives us poems that explore the taste of mind, body and soul that are crafted with sophistication, wit and an emotionally satisfying rhythm. It is an exciting read. “

—Alice Shapiro, Poet Laureate of Douglasville, Georgia

MARY HARWELL SAYLER began writing poems as a child but, as an adult, wrote almost everything except poetry. Although her publishing credits of two dozen traditionally published books (Zondervan, B&H, CSS, Chelsea, Facts on File, etc.) explore a wide range of interests in fiction, nonfiction, devotionals, and children’s books, her first book of poetry, Living in the Nature Poem, came out in 2012 when she found a fitting home in the environmentally-aware publisher Hiraeth Press. As a lover of God, nature, and almost everything living, Mary hopes these poems will encourage readers to reconnect with the natural world, spiritual world, and their own body cells.
